

ABSTRACT

An improved structure and method for making interconnects for a thin package of stacked integrated circuits is described. The structure uses a spring contact to replace traditional solder balls in a stacked structure. The spring contacts are incorporated in an integrated circuit layer and may be made from stressed metal or physical bending of a metal structure. The spring contacts enable electrical coupling to adjacent circuit layers immediately above or immediately below the integrated circuit layer.